PAINS DE MIEL

BY OCÉANE COMBEAU

Three couples spend the afternoon together, seated. Under smiling faces and conciliatory tones, each fights against his own demons and camouflages them as best he can. Whether the word releases or incriminates, everyone will use the table as a public place to examine or witness. The group, the couple, the individual, three ways of being and appearing that exist in parallel but where the true is invariably between the lines. What we show, what we hide.
